What you can do: Discord is the current package leader when it comes to voice chat and community servers for streamers. It offers a convenient way to organize your community and friends into channels, voice chat rooms to play or hang, and usually interact with fans in an easy way. While powerful and versatile, you will first need to configure your Discord server, and figure out the best way to use it for your streaming needs. Here are some tips. How to set up a discord server This is the simple part, because all you really have to do is download the Discord app or open it through a web browser. Once you have an account, you can join a server or create your own. If you already have Discord then just hit the large + button in a circle at the bottom left and you will be guided through to make your own, what to call it and the region in which to host the VOIP servers. Organize the server once you have made a new server for your community, you must invite them, but first start by inviting some friends or of confidence to maintain order. Discord can become ungovernable without organization or moderation, so be sure to create features for your mods or administrators. You can do this by opening the settings and heading to the Functions section. Create roles (with the names you want), and then give them certain permissions, such as the ability to remove people from the server or create new rooms. You don't want everyone to do this or it quickly turns into chaos. Once you have proper functions defined and assigned, right click on anyone on the server and head to the drop-down roles section of the menu to choose which one to name them. You'll also want to create some text and voice channels so that your community stays without going out. You can make text channels for various interests related to games or other topics so people know where to go to talk about their hobbies with others. Make them for individual games so people can find new friends to play with, too. Subs Only If you're making this discord in your existing community come join, you might want to access it behind the paywall of subscribers on Twitch, for example. To do this, there are Discord Integrations that allow you to link accounts and check someone's subscriber status before letting them into your discord server. For more information on how to do this, see the Twitch Integration FAQ on the Discord Help page. Go Live You can even use Discord itself to flow, if you want to give your community an exclusive place to interact with you. Go Live is Discord's newest streaming feature and lets you play on a voice channel for up to 10 viewers on the server, so you can make a separate channel only for higher paid subscriber invitations, for example. Once you have everyone on the channel, launch your game, and in Discord you will see a small Screenshot symbol next to the name of the game in its now Playing state. If they place this, you can choose the channel where you want to play and speak together with your community. Of course, you'll need all the necessary equipment - a decent streaming microphone like the QuadCast HyperX, or headphones like the HyperX Cloud Alpha S will get you to talk to your viewers like they're with you on the couch. The HyperX quadcast. There are plenty of more advanced ways to organize your discord server for transmission, but these should help you get started. Delve into these parameters and figure out fun ways to engage with your community and appreciate your efforts! Exact financing conditions are still in flux, but the new $7 billion price tag would mean Discord had doubled its valuation to less per year. In June, the chat app earned $100 million on an estimated $3.5 billion valuation. A discord spokesman declined to comment on this story. Discord has experienced an upswing in popularity, as the world has suffered the blockade of coronavirus. The chat app looks like a mix of Slack and Reddit with free text, voice and video messaging features. Until June, Discord had 300 million registered users, quadruple the number two years ago. Monthly active users, meanwhile, had reached about 100 million, an increase of 50% in a year. Discord was founded in 2014 by Jason Citron and Stanislav Vishnevskiy, two video game enthusiasts who envisioned a better platform for chatting and playing. (The couple's stakes in the company would likely exceed $700 million each if the company successfully captures the new $7 billion valuation.) Discord for much of his life has been mostly a cult favorite among players, but in recent years, he has been increasingly embraced by more diverse groups, including teachers and offices facing remote education and work. Instead of trying to make money from ads, Discord has focused on growing a subscription business by offering a plan called Nitro to users interested in customizing their profiles. Nitro, which starts at $4.99 a month, had an estimated 1 million subscribers in June, a number that has presumably continued to grow as demand for Discord has picked up in the few months. Although discord has become increasingly mainstream, it has recently seen record daily downloads thanks to the surprise success of the mobile game Between Us, a murder mystery game set aboard a spacecraft. Its daily downloads almost doubled in September--when the fashion between us was first launched- to more than 3.5 million, according to data from App Topia, which oversees the app's universe.
