Radio flyer walker wagon parts

By Brianna When the Monkey first started pulling on furniture and learning to walk, we didn't have much furniture for her to explore together. I wanted to encourage her to continue to learn to walk, but I knew that childhood walkers were discouraged by childhood development professionals. Old walkers are now considered dangerous and perhaps even discourage walking. But Monkey started pushing around empty diaper boxes, and was pulling on everything she could find. So I did my research, and found a lot of great toys for the puppy to push around. We ended up buying one I thought would be the most useful past in this limited phase of monkey development. Enter the Radio Flyer Classic Walker Wagon. This beautifully designed wagon, based on Radio Flyer wagons, which we all know and love, is perfect for novice walkers. There is a bar, just reachable to bring the puppy to grab and pull himself. The wheels give some resistance so that the wagon does not turn around until the baby tries to stand up. The monkey had a blast pushing his wagon around and loading it with his favorite toys (and dog toys, for that matter). There is even a bumper in front, protecting both the wagon and your furniture and walls. The last time we moved, I was very sad that the detached wooden sides were lost by our movers. Fortunately, replacement parts can be sold on the Radio Flyer website. So even if your little one is very rough in this wagon, or, like us, you manage to lose some pieces, rest assured that the parts can be replaced. For us, this wagon was a great investment. The monkey will be able to enjoy this wagon for age four, so it really meets my original criteria of being good for more than one stage of development. Add to that the fact that the missing parts can be replaced, and this becomes a real home run for us, often moving. This toy is more expensive than most toys you get for a child of about one year, but it will provide several years of entertainment, and looks so striking well when it is set up as a birthday or Christmas gift. If you are a grandfather, another relative or friend, it is a great choice for holidays or birthdays. It's a tough five-egg pick.
