Support Communities/Life/GarageBand for Mac looks like no one answered in time. To start the conversation again, just ask a new question. Q: Q. I have finally decided to face a 10-year goal of my one day/maybe and that is to re-learn how to play the piano. And I want to use my Mac to help me do that. Did someone do that? If so, which keyboard and software you used and saw the most successful. I want to find an easy way to get my vision reading and basic chord structures back. Is garage tape useful for this? Any suggestion is welcome. 2.66 Gigach Mac Pro, Mac OS X (10.5.5). 11 performances of Ram, MacBook posted on April 23, 2011 5:05 PM Answer I have this question too (30) I have this question too (30) Also I page content uploaded April 23, 2011 5:34 PM braintonic in response to braintonic assuming you don't have a piano... Using Garageband: You can get a keyboard controller and connect it to your computer, and use GB's piano sounds. M-Audio makes decent keyboard controllers for the money. As someone with a piano background, you'll probably want to get one with a weighted keyboard. Alternatively, you can just get a digital piano with built-in speakers, an all-in-one, and spend time with it. For digital pianos, I'd check yamaha and roland. By the way, a digital piano can also be used to play virtual devices in GB using MIDI. Depending on how much you want to spend, really, how well a physical keyboard you want, and whether you want it to be standalone, or run virtual devices on the computer, and have the sound to come out of the speakers rather than the keyboard itself. Then I picked a song you like and tried to learn it. It's always easier to learn something you like (and a thinning). Maybe you should start with someone you've played before and re-study it. GB is fun because you can add extra parts and play with a variety of sounds/virtual devices. You can also use GB loops to create an instant accompaniment to play along with or improvise over. You can also record yourself in GB and track your progress. Finally, there are piano lessons you can download into GB (other instrument lessons as well). You might find them helpful. I definitely want a keyboard (at least 63 keys) that I can connect to my tower or my MBP and do some sort of interface lessons through Mac. Something where I can learn the scales and basic songs again. Having never opened GB: Does he have a series of lessons? Or is it more of a recording studio? Also, if you have keyboard suggestions (weighted keys, but easy enough to easily and quickly place on my desk when it's time to exercise), I'm an ear tool. I don't mind spending money for one. Help me learn my ribs. Something where I can learn the scales and basic songs again. Here are some keyboard controllers listed on the Sweetwater Sound website (Big Retailer's Sweetwater and their website is good for testing equipment): controllers/Here's a link to their home pianos (they also intensify for digital pianos and portable keyboards/bouncer): guess you'll need to understand how important you will have weighted keys. Weighted keys will make the keyboard heavier and more expensive, but more satisfying to move around. There is also a semi-weighted key type (between a weighted keyboard and a synthesizer action). Axiom M-Audio, a keyboard controller, for example, has a semi-weighted operation. It's good cattle, and some people like it. However, if you need a weighted keyboard, you might not be happy about it. It's hard to write down a keyboard type for someone else. Some people really don't like anything other than a fully weighted keyboard, other people like half-weighted just fine. And others, synthesizer action may be fine, although it doesn't sound like you'd be happy with a synthesizer action if you're trying to regain any kind of ribs. For keyboards, Yamaha, Kurzweil, Roland and Korg, are good brands. For controllers, M-Audio is unbeatable at its price, although there are higher quality controllers if you're willing to pay for them. The brands have been mentioned to have some higher edge controllers and Nord recently came out with (red) digital piano that's pretty good. If there's a music store near you, you might want to go and play some different keyboards and see if there are some that stand out. A lot of it is personal taste, influenced by the time to play traditional pianos (and the expectations of your fingers that are banging on about conventional mechanical action) compared to the time spent playing synthesizers, so you might want to check out some of these keyboards in the flesh to see what feels best for you. After I've never opened GB: Does he have a series of lessons? Or it's more of a recording studio. GB is really more of a recording studio. There are some basic lessons you can download, and some artists' classes, but it sounds like you'd spend more time working outside of these, and use GB primarily for its other features. When I'm just getting started I can walk with a simple M-Audio 61es keyboard station, and a basic pedal. My main goal is to find the software that puts me in the kind of routine classes that make me practice every day. So a simple keyboard start may work just fine. The 61es look like there's pitch control, which I want to play along to songs on the radio or iTunes. Thanks again, great information here.
