Breast Cancer Awareness Month and National Child Loss Awareness Month Throughout the same 31 days. Reminding me that I lost a breast and a baby. October was a beautiful month for me. He gave me mini 100 great bars and oversized sweaters to hide the books I earn from the mini 100 great bars. But now he's crying out to remember cancer and child loss. I assure you that I do not need October to remember any of these things. I have not only physical scars, but also emotional scars. I was 35 years old when I was pregnant with twins. At 22 weeks, I was admitted to the hospital with little chance of the babies surviving. I had PPROM (Preterm, premature rupture of membranes) (Basically, my water broke) I refused to give up hope, but the boys' prospects were bleak. At 28 weeks, on a hot August day, my sons entered the world. And the next day, one of my children died. My survivor spent 6 months in the NICU and while I was trying to help him fight for his life, I was at the same time grieving for the loss of his brother. I never knew that little boy I've heard about for 28 weeks, but his brother is now a 16-year-old who I'm damn proud of. To say that it was the most difficult period of my life is an understatement. There were days when getting up in the morning was all I could moist. But more often than not, there were days when I found strength inside. It was this strength that I had to regain when I was diagnosed with breast cancer at the age of 41. And a reappearance eight years later. I'm a little more than God doesn't put you through everything you can't handle saying. I've been tested enough and often don't want to be the strong one. So I'm just allowing myself that. There are days, even all these years later, as I cry over the loss of our son (Zachary) and there are days (even though I am currently cancer-free) that I cry over what I have experienced. I guess what I've learned is that I think it's wonderful that we're raising awareness of breast cancer and child loss, but those of us who have been through hell don't need a month to remind us that we were there. This position comes from the today parenting team, where all members are invited to post and discuss parenting solutions. Learn more and join us! Because we're all at the same time. This site is not available in your country Gather around as I can tell you a scary story. It's about a really scary month... during which... there were no amazing movies coming out! And all the albums... were about as exciting... as a sweet corn flavor! (Actually: would totally try at least once.) The twist ending in the story is that the month in question is not actually this October. It was another month. RIP that month. He can no longer harm his lack of obsession pop culture. Back to this October, however, you're in luck! Not only are there Gothic gothic horror films Guillermo del Toro and the new music of Janet Jackson, there is also a book that comes out by a moron who writes for Co.Create- who can even write the very sentence you are reading right now. So read on to your October creative calendar, which is sure to keep your attention span away from the cemetery. The Martian, opens on October 2. Steve Jobs, opens October 9.
