Ice has ASMR, slime, soap cutting, slime games, strangely satisfying videos, funny ice eating fails, and mixing random things in slime, slime games, asmr have sounds and more ♡ some of us find escape in video calls and games, others in Netflix and music, others in endless scrolling. But if you're looking for a new, relaxing, visually stimulating way to ease your frayed nerves, you might consider watching a video of slime, soap cutting, or any other form of strangely satisfying content. The world is strangely satisfying content big and uncertain. There are thousands of different types of content optimized to satisfy and relax you - from ASMR to binaural beats to zit-popping, the list can go on. Reddit thread strangely satisfying is the hotbed of these types of posts, like YouTube, Instagram and TikTok.For the purposes of this article, we will stay away from the auditory ASMR, instead of focusing solely on visual content. This is your invitation to a safe, magical, whimsical world of colorful paint, heaving slime, and deliciously skilled workers doing their job well. The science behind the strangely satisfying VideosFirst Off: Why do we even find these types of videos so satisfying? Many researchers have tried to understand the popularity of these strangely satisfying videos. Psychologists have identified what's called Goldilocks feeling - the AKA sense of satisfaction you get when everything is just right. Interestingly, people with OCD often never experience the Goldilocks feeling that tends to lead them to repeat tasks over and over again without ever experiencing a peak gain. These strangely satisfying videos can provide a sense of completion and satisfaction for people who never or rarely experience these feelings in real life, but they can also be enjoyable for everyone, OCD diagnosis or not. At least all of these videos offer the sensation many of us rarely experience. In real life, things are constantly breaking down, wear out, spilling, or burning - it's just life. But these videos show an alternate reality where everything is done perfectly. Colors are mixed into beautiful new shades. Cucumbers unfold in perfect slices. Everything is aligned and combined with each other. However, not all of these video features acts carried through. Many end up with sand collapsing, things falling apart, or huge messes being done. In light of this, there really is no clear conclusion as to why we find these videos so satisfying. In this, they, like any kind of great art: made a magical sort of X factor, but undoubtedly inexplicably great. However, the art of watching a slime drip may seem fanciful at first glance, the look not much when you consider the fact that people have chased brief bursts of relaxation through art for thousands of years- Tibetan Buddhist monks often spend hours or days creating colorful mandalas out of the sand, only to immediately destroy them. We are all looking for peace and relief from suffering, and if you watch someone remove the blacken gets you there, by all means, to enjoy it. From oozing slime to hot knives to glorious paint mixing, here are some of the most entertaining and relaxing weirdly satisfying videos out there. PaintPeople draw on the walls of caves since the dawn of mankind. Perhaps the greatest contemporary artist to evoke relaxation is Bob Ross, whose video has developed a cult following. Bob Ross - Island in the Desert (Season 29 Episode 1) www.youtube.com Today, though, many other people have discovered ways to paint themselves into a soothing, satisfying visual experience. Recently a TikTok user named Tony Piloseno became a topic of conversation when it was revealed that he was fired from his job at Sherwin-Williams when they discovered that he was using his products on the app.Miloseno started posting paint mixing videos while working in a paint shop, and soon enough his TikTok tormented millions of followers. But then, Piloseno made a video that included mixing blueberries with paint, leading to thousands of customer requests; and then someone accused him of wasting his working time on personal activities, and he was fired. However, it continues to create videos, and obviously the people at Sherwin-Williams have lost in a big way because they don't understand how marketing works. Piloseno is far from the only person to take advantage of the sticky paint, hypnotic beauty. PAINT MIXING COMPILATION (SO Satisfaction and Relaxation) #39 www.youtube.com 2. SlimeWith millions of videos dedicated to it and more emerging every day, slime may be the most popular of all these trends.
